AMERICAN GIRLS DO HEROIC WORK IN FRENCH WAR ZONE

Drive Ambulances Under Fire; Save Wounded by Quick Work.

FRENCH SOLDIER CHARGED

A I the left is a photograph of a Scotch lassie made somewhere along the battle front in France. This young woman is enjoying a well earned rest (and a smoke, if you will observe) while waiting a call to bring in the wounded in her motor ambulance. Many such motor vehicles as shown in the photograph at the top, driven by women and gitle who are experts at the wheel, are in use throughout France. Many of them, as the one shown in the picture, take the wounded "Tommies" and "pollus" on long trips through the more peaceful districts. At the bottom, to the left, is Miss Hilda D. Ambler, of Bridgeport, Conn., who is now in France driving under the direction of the volunteer ambulance division. At the right, bottom, is Miss Maria L. Wetherill, a young New York society girl, who has risked her life on many occasions while transporting wounded men close to the French front.
